SHAPING PUBLIC SPACE. MOVING CITY SCAPES 25. – 27.10.2013 / Stavanger & Sandnes, Norway

The Screen City festival explores different perspectives how we construct and deconstruct our city and most of all – space. The spatial practice of everyday life in comparison to the representations of space, how we perceive our city – to how we conceptualize our city – through mapping, planning and the intellectualization of space.

The moving image: new cinematic experiences in public space

The moving image is a classical artistic medium for storytelling, which is currently experiencing a rapid change through new media tools. Its history shows the potential and power it has to visualize current tendencies, political resistance and poetic layers in everyday life. We believe it deserves its space in public, in the urban realm to catalyse change and progress. We believe in the cinematic experience outside the theatre room – not replacing – but offering a new format for the genre.

Stavanger - a city of change and development

The city of Stavanger is going through a rapid city development, mostly driven by the wealth from the Oil business. Facing a rapid growth, it meets challenges of gentrification and conflict of interests. Our point of departure, for content production and as sites for screenings, are these areas with development potentials in the middle of an urban transformation, which we think need careful identity and community building. Pedersgata street and Nytorget is an important focus of the urban development being a "bridge" between Stavanger City Center and the growing east side. It is still consisting of several empty spaces facing future transformations. How can artistic interventions guide and support reflection on this process by giving voice to different parties and ideas? What fears are there and what kind of city do we dream of and want to live in?
